A message to our school from SF Said!

I'd like to say a huge and heartfelt THANK YOU to all the children, parents and teachers at Redmile Primary School! I understand you've been reading my books, Varjak Paw and Phoenix. This means a huge amount to me. The books I read and loved when I was at school changed my life; they made me a reader and a writer, and they've always stayed with me. That's why children's books are the most important books of all, and why I decided to write them myself.

I don't find writing easy. Varjak Paw took me 5 years, and Phoenix took 7. But all the hard work feels worthwhile when I hear that young readers like you at Redmile have enjoyed my work.

All the evidence shows that reading really is life-changing. Children who read for their own enjoyment are more likely to succeed in every way than children who don't – not just at school, but also later on in life. So the best thing schools can do for kids is to build a real reading culture, and it's crucial that parents are part of this. So thank you all for working so hard to inspire the love of reading! I hope my next book will be ready for you to read soon. This one is called TYGER, and I'm currently 6 and a half years into writing it. I think it's nearly there – but it takes as long as it takes to make a book as good as you possibly can, and that's always my ambition. Children's books are too important to give it anything less!

With best wishes,
SF Said
